

Tuesday, June 18th 05:07 PM IST

Diamante Atelier to host private preview, sale of Argyle pink diamonds argyle diamond mine # pink diamonds # diamante atelier

These pink diamonds make up less than one percent of the world's diamond supply. An entire year's worth of Argyle pink diamonds larger than half a carat can fit in the palm of your hand.

FLORIDA, USA (Bullion Street): Diamante Atelier is hosting a preview and sale of Argyle pink diamonds from Thursday, June 27th to Saturday, June 29th. The three-day event is designed specifically for investors and collectors who are looking for an opportunity to purchase extremely rare Argyle pink diamonds.

The event is not open to dealers. The Argyle Diamond Mine, located in the West Kimberley region of Northern Australia, is the world's primary source of natural pink diamonds. These pink diamonds make up less than one percent of the world's diamond supply. An entire year's worth of Argyle pink diamonds larger than half a carat can fit in the palm of your hand. Even more rare is the violet diamond, whose yearly supply would barely fill a teaspoon, Diamante Atelier said in a press release.

The Argyle mine is scheduled to close in 2018, cutting off the world's only consistent supply of natural pink diamonds forever with nothing to replace it. The demand for these rare diamonds greatly outweighs the supply that the earth has provided. The value of these stones has continually increased and attracts investors worldwide. Once the supply has been cut off, the value will soar.